City chooses its final four for Collindale pro position

"We had 10 good proposals," says O'Neill, the city's director of purchasing and risk management and one of the search committee's six members, said Wednesday. "These four ranked above the rest of them. There was a natural break between the top four and the rest."

Candidates not making the cut include Dan Bruntz, a SouthRidge assistant pro; Dave Heinly of Fort Collins; Glenn; Bill Martin, an as-Assistant pro at Patty Jewett GC in Colorado Springs; Bob McNamee, an assistant at Highland Hills GC in Greeley; Brett Barcel of Bloomington, Ill.; and Daniel Flynn of Lodi, N.J. Flynn was a finalist last year at City Park Nine.

The finalists are scheduled to be interviewed Nov. 25 by the search committee, with a decision to be made shortly thereafter.

"That's the major piece (of the selection process)," O'Neill said. "We will rate the candidates on the same criteria that we had from the proposals."

Nance, Collindale's pro since 1991, said he was very pleased to make the cut and wasn't surprised that three of the four finalists were from Fort Collins.

"I think the general feeling among the golfers here is that they like the local golf pros and probably would like to keep it a local thing as much as possible," he said.

Greer, too, said he was very pleased to learn he was a finalist.

"I'm just glad it's down to four," he said. "It's a little awkward for me, though, because Richard Frye worked for me seven, eight, nine years ago, and he's a good friend of mine. Plus, I know the other guys, too."

Smigelsky, who has spent the past month playing mini-tours in Florida, said he expected to be a finalist.

"I feel like I have a lot to offer and that I made a good proposal," he said. "The choices they made didn't surprise me."

Bruntz, in his fourth year as SouthRidge assistant pro, was disappointed to learn he was not a finalist.

"I thought I put a good proposal in," he said. "I was hoping for an interview. That was my whole goal."
