This morning I sent an e-mail response to Erin Udell, a reporter for the Rocky Mountain Collegian newspaper, regarding The Grove at Fort Collins, Project Development Plan. The response (below) is based on her request made Sunday, February 20th:

I wrote a piece about the new "Grove" development slated to open this August back in November. I was wondering if you know any new details about the current planning (I know they had to go back to the drawing board and change plans last year). If you could email me back or give me a call it would be greatly appreciated. I'll be by my phone all day. Thanks!

Campus Crest's (the developer) initial submittal of The Grove, Project Development Plan (submitted in July, 2010) was withdrawn in December, 2010. The owners of that company submitted a new The Grove at Fort Collins, Project Development Plan on December 8, 2010. That plan has been through one round of development review by the City and a staff comment letter dated January 4, 2011 was issued to Campus Crest and their consultants. We (City staff) are awaiting submittal of plan revisions based on the comments provided to the developer. Therefore, The Grove at Fort Collins, Project Development Plan is in "the developer's ballpark" at this time. Per the City's Land Use Code, the developer must submit revised plans within 6 months of the date of the staff comment letter. Near the end of that 6-month period the developer may request a 4-month extension of that deadline or possibly risk having the Project Development Plan expire.

The owners of Campus Crest are currently working with the Institute for the Built Environment at CSU to help determine if and how sustainable, green building concepts may be incorporated into The Grove at Fort Collins development.

So, at this time, City staff is in a waiting mode regarding The Grove at Fort Collins, Project Development Plan.
